

4 LEADERSHIP SKILLS FOR

Better Teamwork

Even people who are not leaders in an official capacity can still benefit from cultivating leadership skills. Developing as a leader could help further your career and also help create stronger and more productive work teams. While there are many different qualities that go into making an effectiverelationships, which are built on trust. The integrity you show in your behavior and interactions with others will help lead people to trust you.

Brought to you by the North American Hardware and Paint Association

YourNHPA.org

COMMUNICATION

To be an effective communicator, practice active listening. Make sure you completely understand what the other person is saying before you respond, then respond with respect and empathy. Clear communication will help you build trust and make it easier to enlist the help of teammates when solving problems.

INTEGRITY

sk yourself if you practice
what you preach when it comes to being a person
you or someone else
should trust. Even if you do, what could you do to be more fair and more careful to make your behavior consistent with what you say?

TEAMWORK

together requires building relationships. Relationships are built on trust, which is an outgrowth of the integrity you show in your behavior and interactions. Teamwork involves listening, understanding another person's strengths and then putting those strengths to work.

PROBLEM-SOLVING

Becoming a good problem-solver requires learning to stay calm under pressure and quickly overcoming obstacles to productivity. Problem-solving may also necessitate you to draw on relationships you've developed by asking team members to help you.